Broke Your Grandmother's Heirloom China? Don't Throw it Away – Wear It!

Jewelry Designer Recycles Broken China and Turns It Into Wearable Art

Seminole, Florida (August 15, 2007) . . . Recycled broken china is now an everyday wearable art form at Kryzia Kreations. The studio of jewelry designer, Christina Paluszek, is now turning broken china into unique keepsake necklaces and bracelets. Each china necklace or bracelet design is handcrafted individually by cutting the china, grinding it down to the desired shape, and then setting it in a completely hand-fabricated sterling silver bezel.

Historically, Kryzia Kreations, has created beautiful, whimsical jewelry fashioned mainly from sterling silver combined with various semi-precious gemstones, freshwater pearls, and various gold karat accents. The addition of pieces of recycled china and pottery as the jewelry's main focal point, creates a modern design with a slightly antique feel. The necklace or bracelet not only becomes a sentimental treasure and conversation piece, but more importantly, it is a great way to recycle and keep our Earth green. And if the piece of china is from a cherished family set, the jewelry can be worn for years, and then passed down to the next generation - following in the footsteps of most family china.

Paluszek scours flea markets, thrift stores and estate sales to find the various china plates and tiles that she uses in her designs. Pre-made china jewelry designs are for sale on her website in the "Heirloom Collection" at <http://www.kryziakreations.com/heirloom.htm> , however custom orders are highly encouraged. For Paluszek, it is a great compliment to work directly with a client and turn a cherished piece of family china into a wearable keepsake that can also be passed down through generations to come. And, you'll be doing your part to help save the environment too!
